When They Come to Your Door

The Do's and Don'ts When Latter-Day Saints Missionaries come to your door.

¹ <https://newsroom.churchofjesuschrist.org/facts-and-statistics>

Do's

- Open the door
- Be friendly, respectful, and polite
- If you are not interested in talking, just tell them you're not interested
- Offer them water
- Have a conversation
- Express what you believe as a Christian
- If you have questions about the LDS Church, ask them what they believe
- Pray for them and pray with them if they agree

It is the duty of every Christian to be Christ to his neighbor.

--Martin Luther

Things to Remember

Every year, thousands of young men and women give two years of their lives to serve the faith they believe in.

When you hear that knock on your door, behind it stand two people who come in love and compassion. We too should show that same love and compassion in the truth that is found only in Jesus Christ.

Understand that those missionaries and many other members of the Latter-Day Saints will use the same words you hear at your church but the meanings are very different. Be clear about what you believe and have a clear evangelical message ready to present.

Consider inviting a member of the Missouri Baptist Apologetics Network to speak at your church.

Don'ts

- Argue
- Shut or slam the door in their faces or blow them off
- Tell them they are going to Hell
- Use rude language
- Assume that everything you have heard or read on the Internet about the LDS Church is true
- Attack their faith, church, and leaders
- Invite them back unless you truly mean it
